Who I Am

DeAnna's writing style has been described as easy, calming, gentle, unobtrusive, and Christ-like. Just like her. Yet, through her challenging words and inspiring stories, she gets to the point quickly about the need to help broken people wherever they are.

DeAnna writes blogs and newsletters and crafts communication pieces for nonprofits. She fills her weekly newsletter, A Good Word Wednesday, with bite-sized slices of life from her own experiences and from those she has met around the world.

DeAnna has served her church as a missions minister and worked in a global nonprofit as Indonesian Country Director and as Director of Communications. She has communication degrees from Ouachita Baptist University and Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary.

DeAnna lives in Duncan, Oklahoma with her husband, Johnny, and their two Fox Red Labradors. She loves long walks and then relaxing on her deck, sipping flavorful coffee and savoring one of the several books she enjoys reading at the same time.

My mission

I inspire mission-driven Christ-followers to sharpen their focus on undervalued, unseen people, locally and globally, lead them to meet those people at the point of their pain and offer them a hope-filled future.

Ask Me:

- Why are you passionate about justice issues? How do those issues influence your writing?
- Who influenced you to be a writer?
- Why do you think we don't always see people in need?
- What is the value in calling someone by name?
- Who are some of the fascinating people you've met on your journeys?
- What is your favorite story from your book?
- Where do you get your inspiration to write?
- How can people be world changers and justice influencers?
